About Me

Hi! I'm Luciana (she/her), a first-year English student with autism and epilepsy. I came to university relatively newly-diagnosed with autism, and quickly took to disability studies and activism. Outside of academic affairs I can be found infiltrating the OU Ceilidh band with my American folk instruments, learning to swing dance, and ordering clothes off of Vinted that went out of style twenty years ago.

Aims

- To make accessibility a part of the culture of St Anne's to ensure nobody has to struggle to have their needs believed, met, and respected
- To maintain a dialogue between myself and other disabled students to guarantee events are inclusive to more specific accommodations

Experience

- Original member of National Museums Liverpool's Youth Engagement Form; collaborating with up to forty other young adults to organise and host events in museums
- Student speaker at Neurodiversity Schools event alongside Neurodiversity Oxford
- Member of the new content creation/accessibility team for the Oxford From the Inside Podcast

Ideas

- Implement sensory-friendly/quiet areas for freshers' week and large in-college events
- Welfare events to support disabled students experiencing burnout/isolation/ableism
 - Socials that aim to platform/celebrate disabled students and disability

Good at making pancakes!

A glowing review!

Tv show writers: "ok we need to make an autistic character. Make sure to research all there is to know about autism to make them as accurate as possible"

Autistic ppl: "this character ask if this would cause any problems sucks anyways back to writing my essay on why lightning McQueen is on the spectrum"
